

Hi, a round-the-clock flea market and two brocantes

the Vintage Market Guide

Hi there,

Summer has properly arrived: around 35 markets are taking place this weekend from one end of Switzerland to the other, from the shores of Lac Léman to those of the Bodensee. It is one of the fullest weekends of the year before July's quieter rhythm sets in. If you have been waiting for a weekend to make a real day of it, this is the one.

A few are worth planning an entire outing around. In the east, the 24h-Flohmarkt Konstanz / Kreuzlingen does exactly what its name promises: a flea market that runs straight through the night, from Saturday afternoon into Sunday, on both sides of the border between the two lakeside towns. Bring a torch and stay late, or come early on Sunday for the bleary-eyed bargains.

Over in the west, the Brocante de Lutry takes over the old village on Lac Léman from Friday to Sunday. For three days, antiques and brocante fill one of Romandie's prettiest lakeside settings. It is also one of the few markets that only comes around once a year.

And up in the Jura, the Puces du SAS in Delémont returns for its 12th edition, filling the castle courtyard with sixty-odd dealers, wood-fired pizza and live music. Less a flea market than a small summer festival where you can drift between the stalls in search of treasures.

Three regions, three very different moods, one weekend. We will be at the first two in person, so say hello if you spot us.

TVMG - Market Diaries

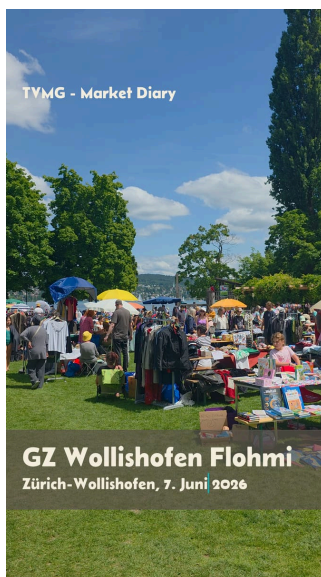

Flohmarkt im Rüti Center, Pratteln: a lively, practical flea market over three floors, busy, easy-going and full of real bargains. Not a place to stroll, but to hunt and haggle.

Quartierflohmarkt St. Alban, Basel: open garage doors along the St. Alban-Rheinweg, private stalls, families and the view over the Rhine. Circular economy in its friendliest form.

Flohmarkt am See, Wollishofen: small private stalls on the meadow by the community centre, right on Lake Zurich, with a bistro next door. More a neighbourhood meeting point than a market.
