

  The treasure hunt carries on all summer

the Vintage Market Guide

Hi there,

After several weekends of intense heat, the markets, the stallholders and all of you visitors finally get a little breathing room... The temperatures will stay summery, but they should be noticeably more pleasant. Good conditions, then, for strolling through the stalls at a calmer pace, striking up a conversation and taking the time to look a little closer!

With 22 markets across Switzerland on Saturday and Sunday, there is plenty to discover again this week. At the same time, the events calendar is slowly taking on the rhythm of the coming summer holidays. After a few especially busy weekends, the programme is becoming a little quieter and more leisurely.

Some markets take a summer break during the holidays, while others carry on throughout July and August, sometimes at a slightly slower and more relaxed pace. There may be fewer stalls or fewer dates, but in return more time to browse, enjoy and make a market visit part of a relaxed summer outing.

Today on Instagram we featured a few markets that keep going right through the summer holidays. Best to save the post for the weeks ahead!

TVMG - Market Diaries

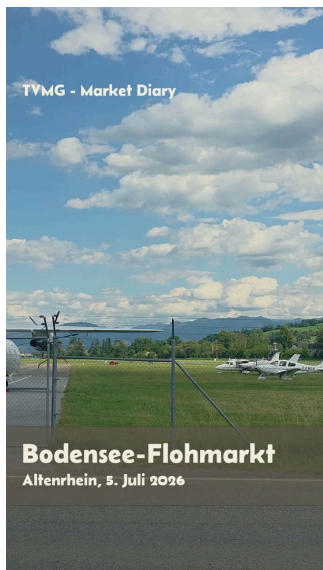

Flohmarkt Gallusplatz, St. Gallen: we arrived early on the cobbles in the heart of the UNESCO abbey quarter, and the square was already alive. A sociable market with a lovely mix of secondhand and antiques, and the famous Abbey Library just a few steps away.

Night-Flohmarkt Kloten, Zürich: at the town's first night flea market on the Stadtplatz we found a cheerful, easy-going summer evening, lively and sociable. Less a classic treasure-hunt than a light family event, with flea-market stalls, a food stand and a lovely guitar duo.

Bodensee-Flohmarkt Altenrhein, St. Gallen: in blazing heat we spent Sunday afternoon at the market right beside the airfield, where a plane takes off just next door now and then. A proper flea market with a broad, honest mix, from old tools to antiques and vintage collectibles.

Thank you, and Mira now understands Switzerland in two ways

Last week we introduced you to Mira, our WhatsApp scout, who helps you find flea markets and brocantes near you. You may already have tried her out since then, and for that, a warm thank you. We are especially grateful if you sent us your feedback afterwards. It is exactly those pointers that move Mira forward week after week.

One of those replies brought a lovely subtlety to light. Someone was looking specifically for markets in the Suisse Romande, and that is trickier than it sounds. Switzerland is officially divided into seven major geographic regions, such as the Lake Geneva region or the Espace Mittelland. The language regions, however, cut right across them: Romandie includes Geneva and Vaud, but also Neuchâtel, Jura and the French-speaking part of Fribourg, which geographically belong to the Mittelland.

So we taught Mira exactly this distinction. You can now ask her for either one: a geographic region or a language region, and she understands both.

Give it a try and say hello to Mira here: wa.me/41784483687. Ask her what is on this weekend in the Romandie, and see how she does. If something stands out, simply reply to this email.

Until next week,
